This is a picture of some curtains that I made. I did not have the money to go buy new material to make curtains, so instead I used some left over material.

I decided to use all different size squares from two inches up to twelve inches in size. After I started to lay out the pattern, I decided that I should do a mirror pattern. I made the pattern up as I went along. The pattern was laid out so that one panel of the curtains would mirror the other side.

This set of curtains is just one of the many different things that I have sewn for my daughter.

This was my grandmother's wicker chair. She loved wicker. Years ago she said she was waiting. Waiting to die. That mentality tore her apart faster. She died in the summer of 1999 when I was five. Didn't see the next century.

One summer in 2009 my sister eventually threw this chair out for the dump. I took it and put it in the woods and used that chair for a nice seat to listen to the birds.

The initial beauty incited a picture. The story gave it a feel and a name. As far as I know it is still there; I have not visited this site in over 15 months.
